Essen-based violinist-turned-painter wins international botanical prize at World Orchid Conference in Dresden

Daria Beizerov receives Certificate of Merit, 3rd Place for Plant Identification at the 24th World Orchid Conference — the only Western German artist to place in the competition, judged by an international jury of botanists and artists.

Daria Beizerov, a botanical watercolour artist based in Essen, has been awarded the Certificate of Merit, 3rd Place in the Plant Identification category at the 24th World Orchid Conference in Dresden — the most significant international gathering for orchid science and botanical art, held every four years. The award was given for her detailed watercolour study of a Zygopetalum hybrid, assessed by an international panel of botanists and artists from seven countries.

The path to Dresden is an unusual one. Beizerov holds a Master of Music in violin performance from the Folkwang University of the Arts in Essen and spent nearly three decades as a classical musician before turning to botanical painting full-time in 2022. Her guiding principle — guiding the brush like a violin bow — brings the discipline of daily practice and the patience of a trained ear to scientifically accurate watercolour studies on archival paper.

Her public pigment journal on Instagram (@daria.botanicals, ~4,000 international followers) has been shared repeatedly by the American pigment house Daniel Smith and commented on by the Australian watercolour authority Jane Blundell. Beizerov is a member of the Society for Botanical Art Germany, where she was featured in the Journal and teaches workshops.

Alongside her independent practice, Beizerov is building a botanical watercolour academy — a forthcoming online programme for practitioners who want to work with lightfast pigments and scientifically informed methods. Free monthly live painting sessions already draw an international audience.

"Botanical painting, especially by the most experienced artists, sometimes reaches the same level of poetry as the great works of classical music — the same ability to leave you speechless."
